W.I.A.C. at the Halesworth Gallery

by Frederick Laws

Group shows of the Women's International Art Club are notable first for the firmly professional standard of the work selected and secondly for the variety of style and content. It is a real achievement for an art society which began in 1900 to have avoided becoming a narrow enclosure for a single manner of painting or age-group of painters. The W.I.A.C. has now welcomed the young of several generations; but though catholic in taste about schools or theories it is obstinate about quality, unlike some supermarkets of art which bring the word 'amateur' from condescension into being a term of abuse.

In the show that has come to Suffolk you will find works in a pure tradition of English abstraction, flower pieces and domestic interiors which look back to the delicacies of the Intimist school of Paris. You will also find expressionist statements Scandinavian in their emotional emphasis. Hard-edge from the United States has made its impact here and so have the long-continuing researches in the interactions of pure colours on each other and on the seeing eye. There is evidence that surrealism still has life in it, and that some artists can happily forget everything that has happened in art since Constable died.

The word "International" in the name of the club is justified by the presence of individual artists of Russian, Japanese, Belgian, Polish, Swedish and Irish origin. And since it is only sensible for artists to live and work in East Anglia, neighbouring people and places are to be found here.

It is hardly relevant but should, perhaps, finally be mentioned that the artists are women.
